Direct Tail Blast

Why do the photo and video captures by the public show such variation? At times, the tail is blown to the side, from right to left and curling around up above the Sun. During such times one sees the Moon Swirls as tubes, from the side. At times the tail is blown more directly toward the Earth such that the Moon Swirl tubes allow sunlight to funnel down them toward the Earth, showing a brilliant light at the ends like a flashlight. At rare times the Moon Swirls arrange themselves into a String of Pearls where their relationship to one another is obvious. In late October, the tail was blown so directly toward the Earth between October 16 and October 21 that the components were lost in the debris and dust in the vast tail of Planet X, though some individual moons within the Moon Swirls were clearly still visible. What causes these changing views? Per the Zetas, the direction of the tail is key.

ZetaTalk Explanation 10/27/2012: What is happening with the vast tail of Planet X when at one point it forms Moon Swirl orbs around the Sun, at another is slung to the side so the Moon Swirls look like tubes, at another tossed above or below the Sun so the Moon Swirl orbs are seen as a String of Pearls, and at yet another blown so directly at the Earth that the Moon Swirls are lost in the clutter of debris so that no sunlight can funnel through them toward Earth. Clearly, the direction of the tail is key. Brilliant, large Moon Swirl orbs close to the Sun occur when the tail is blown toward the Earth, with the dominant, large moons in the swirl being most affected by the magnetic push while the lesser moons, surprisingly, line up behind the dominant moons seeking shelter from the magnetic push on the Earth side of the swirl. The minor moons are hiding behind the dominant moons.

The String of Pearls, which are Moon Swirl orbs slung to the side rather than directly at the Earth, occur rarely when the tail in general is blown to the side by a dither in Planet X but the Sun's magnetic field affects the charged tail so that they again line up so that sunlight can funnel through them to the Earth. This is a dual action on the Moon Swirls, both Planet X and the Sun's magnetism affecting them. At other times Planet X points the hose of magnetic particles coming from its N Pole so directly at the Earth that the vast charged tail, which normally spreads out over a vast area, condenses, clumping so any sunlight that would funnel through the Moon Swirl tubes is lost in the dust cloud and debris. One could correlate these times with the magnetic compression of the Earth's magnetic field.

Did the twisting and compression of the Earth's magnetosphere relate? Per the popular Pole Shifting blog on these matters, it did indeed. On October 19 an unprecedented "trifecta of anomalies" occurred.

Animation of today's magnetosphere - an unprecedented "trifecta" of anomalies over 13 hours: multiple severe compressions, severe turbulence, beginning with a conspicuous dipole tilt toward Planet X at 10:57 UTC.

Would such a direct assault of the tail blow red dust into the Earth's atmosphere? The establishment seems to think so. Sweden and the UK are being warned that red dust, supposedly from the Sahara, will blow their way in the next week or so.

"Blood Rain" Headed in Sweden's Direction

October 19, 2012

<http://sverigesradio.se/sida/artikel.aspx?programid=2054&artikel=5316203>

Blood rain, or red rain, is not as dangerous as it sounds. In this case, it consists of a rain cloud loaded with dust from the Sahara Desert, heading towards Sweden.

Watch out for 'Blood Rain' at Halloween

October 21, 2012

<http://www.dailymail.co.uk/news/article-2220928/Scenes-Red-October-Magical>

Forecasters are predicting unseasonably warm weather next week thanks to a warm band of air from North Africa, but warned the mild conditions won't last, with snow on its way towards the end of the week. 'Blood rain' also expected as band carries red Saharan dust.

But this Pole Shift ning blog points out that dust from the Sahara is not red, but cream colored!

Saharan Dust Changes South Florida Skies

The dust layer typically remains 5,000-6,000 feet above the ground and will paint the sky a "milky" shade. We'll start noticing that milky or hazy appearance.

Buoy Murder

What does the steady tilting of the Indo-Australian Plate and the steady sinking of the Sunda Plate have to do with the death of a buoy maintenance man? Plenty, per the Zetas, who say this 30 year veteran of buoy maintenance for the Malay government met his death because he had a tendency to simply tell the truth. How does a senior buoy maintenance man die while attending to a buoy that had been hoisted aboard a boat? Did they drop the buoy on him? Did he suddenly have a heart attack at the strange sight of a buoy? Or was it what he was insisting on writing in his report – that the buoy was not malfunctioning!

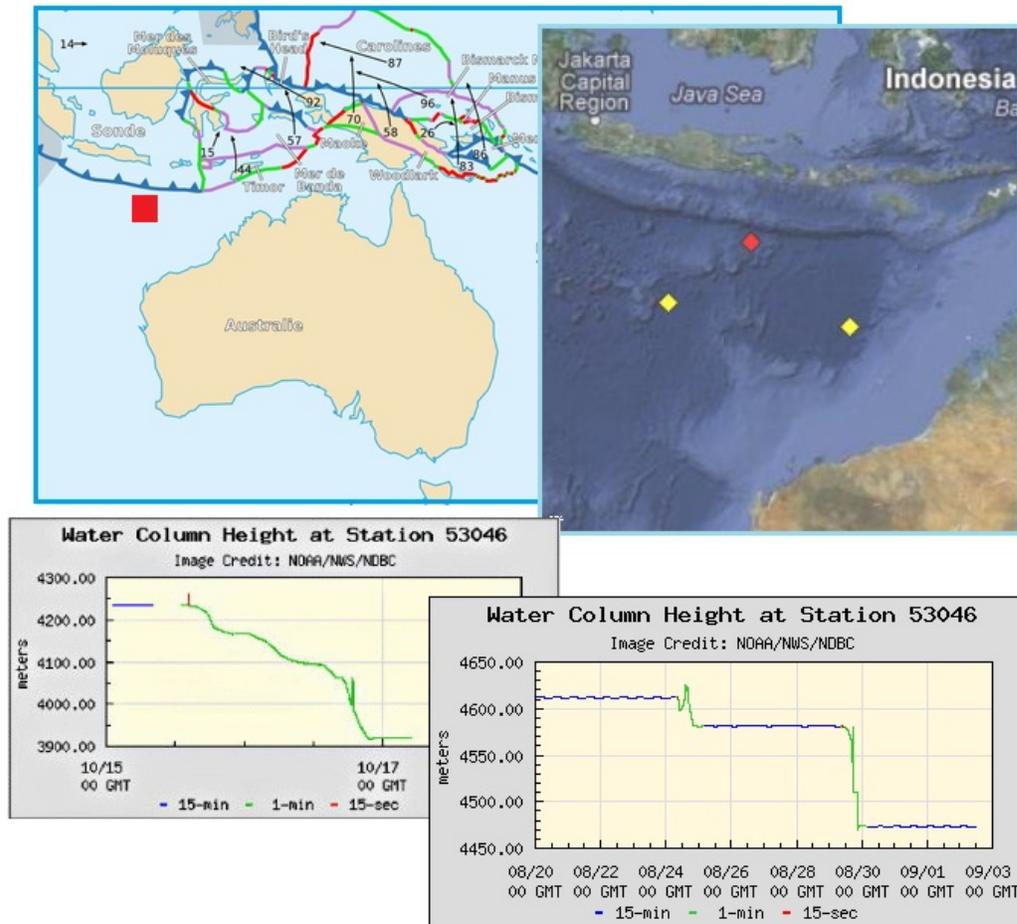

Tsunami Buoy Maintenance Halted after Fatal Accident

October 20, 2012

<http://www.theborneopost.com/2012/10/20/tsunami-buoy-maintenance-halted-after-fatal-accident/>

The maintenance of a tsunami buoy at Sipadan Island on Sabah's east coast has been halted due to a fatal accident while the buoy was being serviced on board MV Pendamar, said the Malaysian Meteorological Department. The department said Lyng, 53, a specialist working with the buoy system for more than 30 years was one of the most experienced engineers in this field and had been involved with SAATNM programme since its implementation in 2005.

The buoy in question, Buoy 53046, had shown the sea floor rising dramatically, approximately 2300 feet within the course of a few days. This buoy rides on the very edge of the Indo-Australian Plate where the Sunda Plate is being pushed under the Indo-Australian Plate. Sounds like a scenario for a sudden rise in sea level at that point. Per the Zetas, this is what caused the rise and this is what got poor Lyng inadvertently killed.

ZetaTalk Comment 10/27/2012: This buoy is owned and maintained by a Malaysian company, and Malaysia is situated on lands on the Sunda Plate, which is sinking. They are quite sensitive that their populace not realize their situation, and panic. Since the start of the 7 of 10 plate movements the flooding of low lying lands has been explained as rain, or ground water extraction causing a collapse, or rising seas that somehow only seem to affect SE Asia. Evidence that the Indo-Australian Plate is rising dramatically just at the border of the Sunda Plate that houses Malaysia did create panic, but not in the general populace. The panic was among the elite in this country.

Plate borders are not smooth, but rough, and when pressed against each other much crumbling occurs on all sides. The pressure of the compressing Pacific against the great Eurasian Plate can be seen in the number of small platelets above Australia, where that portion of the Sunda Plate, itself a tongue of the Eurasian Plate, has shattered into platelets. The fact that the sea floor rose suddenly and dramatically under buoy 53046 is because a portion of this plate border began jutting up toward the surface. The 30 year veteran of buoy maintenance was an honest man, and was expected to simply tell the truth to the public, and for this he lost his life, murdered by the elite in Malaysia.

As pointed out on this Pole Shift ning blog, buoys in the area are showing continuing plate movement. Buoy 55012 shows the sea floor rising, and buoy alerts show the entire area jolting, all the way to the Aleutian Islands due to the steady compression of the Pacific.

Tending the Dead

The US Congress departed early during the election season, leaving behind a passel of unfinished high-priority work.

Congress Takes Seven-Week Election Break

September 23, 2012

<http://www.burlingtonfreepress.com/viewart/20120923/NEWS04/120923001/Congress>

Lawmakers will return in about seven weeks and face a crowded list of must-do items. The nation will have to wait until after the election for Congress to deal with taxes, spending cuts, the farm bill and the cash-strapped Postal Service. It comes as no surprise to lawmakers that their public approval has plummeted to about 12 percent.

Yet they found time to pass HR 6566, a bill which stresses that in any US emergency where mass fatalities are experienced, the Jewish and Muslim rituals of a burial within 48 hours must be given high priority!

FEMA To Mobilize For "Mass Fatality Planning"

October 5, 2012

<http://www.infowars.com/fema-to-mobilize-for-mass-fatality-planning>

The United States Congress has passed a bill which mandates the Federal Emergency Management Agency (FEMA) to prepare for "mass fatality planning" and funeral homes, cemeteries and mortuaries being "overwhelmed" in the aftermath of a mass terror attack, natural disaster or other crisis. Noting the necessity for emergency preparedness in relation to terror attacks, natural disasters and man-made disasters, the bill instructs FEMA to be sensitive to the fact that Jews and Muslims require bodies to be buried within 48 hours of death. Should the bill be given the green light by the Senate.

H.R. 6566: Mass Fatality Planning and Religious Considerations Act

September 28, 2012

<http://www.govtrack.us/congress/bills/112/hr6566/text>

Congress finds the following:

(1) Emergency preparedness often plans for how to prepare and provide for survivors of a natural disaster, act of terrorism, or other man-made disaster, but fails to plan for how to prepare for and respond to mass fatalities that result from such an incident.

(2) Funeral homes, cemeteries, and mortuaries could be overwhelmed should mass fatalities arise from a natural disaster, act of terrorism, or other man-made disaster.

(3) Different religions have different customs surrounding death; for example, the Jewish and Muslim religions call for burial of the deceased not later than 48 hours after death.

Are they suggesting that tending to the dead takes precedence over tending to the living? Determining the identity of each body, and thus the religious preference, while the injured bleed and scream? The Zetas have described a horrific death rate as a result of the Pole Shift – 90% of the current populace dying as a result of drowning during ocean sloshing, flooding during torrential rains and the backwash of rivers from sloshing, magnitude 9 earthquakes worldwide, exploding volcanoes, untreated injuries and infections, starvation, and depression from loss. Of course, coastal and river bottom areas will be more affected than the heartlands. Crowded cities with collapsed buildings will be more affected than sparsely populated regions. This is the expected scene as a result of the Pole Shift, but emergencies such as the New Madrid adjustment await the US too, and will come prior to the Pole Shift. Per the Zetas, there will be scarce time and energy to attend to the dead, as the living are more important. Tending to the dead is, after all, just a ritual.

ZetaTalk Advice 9/2/2003: Primarily, the large die-off will be in places which are pleasant living now, coastal cities, or river basin cities. These cities grew up where commerce was available, and the heavy die-off will be there. Since the waters rise, it will become fish food. In other areas, cities high in the hills, obviously, this will be a reeking mess. Nature takes care of this, in short order, within months, through bacteria and bugs. If you really want to know how to deal with it, get some chickens that eat the bugs and send them out there to fill up, and then you can eat the eggs. Just stay downwind of the stench. This is not exactly socially proper advice, because people want to bury their dead. Most of the dead will be under buildings or trapped under water somewhere. You have to do a mindset to think of the survivors. Think of the living who are feeling pain. Your obligation to the dead is only a ritual you can put aside.

What is the US Congress suggesting? That in a crisis, such as the pending New Madrid Fault line adjustment, people should attend to ritual rather than attend to the living? My guess is that they are not using the lessons from the Haiti quake of 2010.

2010 Haiti Earthquake

http://en.wikipedia.org/wiki/2010\_Haiti\_earthquake

The Haitian government reported that an estimated 316,000 people had died. Port-au-Prince's morgues were overwhelmed with tens of thousands of bodies. These had to be buried in mass graves. At the city's overwhelmed morgue, rotting corpses had been piling high, their arms jutting out with rigor mortis almost as if they were reaching up towards the tropical sun.

Haiti Earthquake: Thousands of Bodies are Dumped in Stench-Filled Mass Graves

January 16, 2010

<http://www.telegraph.co.uk/news/worldnews/centralamericaandthecaribbean/haiti/>

Decomposing bodies are first picked from the ground and hurled into trucks operating as makeshift mass hearses that are driving around the city. The vehicles then head for the mass graves, back up to the holes and empty out their contents. It is a grim spectacle. The desperate measures have been introduced amid fears that the decomposing corpses and the mosquitos feeding on them could spread disease. But it means that many Haitians will never know where their lost loves are buried.

A chapter in the Finegan Fine story, called Burial at Sea deals with this issue. Young Joey has been separated from his parents and now grandpa has died. Finegan has agreed to use his houseboat to return Joey and the corpse of grandpa to Joey's parents.

The following morning Finegan has a couple passengers on the houseboat. Joey is sleeping at the side of his dead grandpa, who has been wrapped in a sheet. Joey has one arm over the chest of the corpse, his head resting on grandpa's shoulder despite the flies beginning to buzz about. Finegan is standing in the doorway of the house, arms folded, looking at the scene and pondering. Joey points across the water. "We lived over there, but yonder, behind that hill." Seeing the cloud of buzzing flies, Finegan is seeking a quick solution. "You ever heard of burial at sea?" Joey is clearly anxious about being separated from his only flesh and blood relative at hand, even if the flesh and blood are not too responsive. "But then I could never go visit my granpa!" The corpse has been moved up to the front of the boat and positioned so it is sitting up, as though grandpa were participating in the homecoming. The flies have gotten thicker now, buzzing around in angry swarms.

Joey can suddenly see the spot where his home used to be. He gets a stunned look on his face, stumbles backwards toward grandpa and falls into his lap. Joey is batting at the buzzing flies and starting to tear up. He scrambles to his feet and up onto the rooftop where he can face Finegan. "That's the house, there, in the water!" The one-story suburban ranch house is situated on a hillside so that the basement is developed with a patio out into the backyard. The house is flooded to the extent that the basement is under water by a couple feet. The house appears to be deserted. Joey is clamoring up the stairs in search of his family but returns, standing at the top of the stairs. "They're gone." Finegan mounts the stairs. "Did they leave a note?"

The house has an open style, so there are no walls between the kitchen and living areas. Finegan and Joey are looking around on table tops, the refrigerator door, the bathroom mirror, and the kitchen counter top, but are finding no indication of anything but disorganized panic. Some items of clothing have been left on the sofa. A glass of juice sits half empty on the kitchen countertop. Finegan walks into the master bedroom but lingers in the doorway, as though not wanting to invade the sanctity of the marital bedroom. He notices a photo of the couple on their wedding day, and removes the photo from the frame, handing this to Joey. "Here. Will come in handy. Tell folks what they look like." Joey is looking solemn. He takes the photo and stuffs it into his jacket pocket.

Finegan and Joey are returning to the houseboat with their arms full of loot. Joey is standing shock still, staring at his seated grandpa. By now the corpse is almost covered with flies and various insects that are trying to find their way through the sheet that is covering the corpse like a mummy. Joey has become resigned. He turns to look over his shoulder toward Finegan, who is wading back with the grappling hooks held high. "What was that about burial at sea?"

Space Port Earth

At the start of the ZetaTalk saga, I, Nancy, reported a recall I had about a trip to the Gobi Desert, where the Zetas took me to one of their space ports.

NancyTalk Report: We went there in a large ship, larger than the usual used during routine contacts, and this ship had a brown see-through floor and ceiling. We went into the side of a mountain, after coming across a barren desert. There were no trees or vegetation on the mountain range. The entrance to the Zeta home was artificially made, and could not be viewed from a distance. The entrance was off a canyon, straight into the side of the canyon, and the track took a curve. The large ship (which could have comfortably carried 50 people, throughout) locked into some kind of track in the entrance, which guided the ship, held on all sides, smoothly onto a landing port. I was shown, at one point, a natural cavern filled with idle ships.

Google Earth is showing a couple entrances into solid rock in Antarctica which appear to be similar space ports. The entrance is shielded by an overhang, and none of this looked like a natural rock outcropping. In the past, the Zetas have asserted that humans such as the Nazi did not live underground in Antarctic, nor did Admiral Byrd have contact with aliens in Antarctica.

ZetaTalk Answer 10/27/2012: What is the clearly manufactured entrance into Antarctica rock, in the shape of a space ship? It is what it seems to be, an entrance for space ships. This port is not currently in use, nor would curious man find anything laying about that might be useful or educational. As Nancy has explained in her report on a trip to the Gobi Desert to one of our current space ship ports, such entrances are carved into solid granite and positioned so as not to be seen from an Earthly view. The Gobi Desert port took into consideration mankind's current use of satellites, the entrance being at the side of a deep ravine, whereas the Antarctic port did not have this worry.

Who lived there? We have explained the plethora of alien life forms currently visiting Earth, and the myriad worlds they come from. It matters not what alien group found Antarctica convenient, as the history of visitations as explained by ourselves has covered the basics. Genetic engineering projects, early counseling by ambassadors from the Service-to-Other and Service-to-Self, and simple exploration by the Earthly equivalent of biologists and sociologists have visited the Earth in the past. Antarctica has never been inhabited by early man, so the space ports there were never under threat of discovery. This port nor any underground facility in Antarctica was not, at any time, utilized by mankind, despite myths about Admiral Byrd or the Nazis to the contrary.
